The present invention relates to a detecting device used in a multiple integrated laser engagement system and, a gun simulation system, and in particular, to a target detecting device of a multiple integrated laser engagement system using a laser light and to a housing of a magazine shape or a simulated magazine used in an arms transmitter as well as to a gun simulation system related thereto.

D1 is a firearm laser training system which includes a laser transmitter assembly, one or more actuable target assemblies each having a target, an interface unit and a computer system. The target assemblies raise and lower targets in accordance with control signals from the computer system.

D2 is a firearm training system which allows the measurement and display as a function of time of the hand grip force pattern applied to the grip of a firearm by a weapon hand of a shooter. This permits the detection of variations in the individual hand grip forces in the pattern during firing of the weapon.

D3 is a combat training system which includes a transmitter of a first electroluminescent signal representative of a projectile fired at a front of a structure, which is detected at the structure's front. An extent of damage that would be expected to be experienced by the structure is determined from the detected first signal. A second electroluminescent signal is transmitted behind the structure that is representative of the expected damage extent.

D4 is to provide a simulated hand-grenade optimum for practice by keeping constant as far as possible the detection range and distance without impairment of directivity on an origin side.

D5 is a survival game system and a controlling method thereof are provided to increase an interest in the game by recognizing a state of a player through the radio frequency communication and recognition data, and analyze a game result, and manage the game data of each player by storing the game state data in a database in realtime.

Continuation of:

Box V.

None of the available prior art discloses a detecting device used in a multiple integrated laser engagement system and a gun simulation system, and in particular, to a target detecting device of a multiple integrated laser engagement system using a laser light and a housing of a magazine shape or a simulated magazine used in an arms transmitter as well as to a gun simulation system. Therefore, the subject matter of the claims 1, 15, 29, 45, 54, 55 and 56 of the present invention is considered new (Art. 33(2) PCT). As dependent claims, the subject matter of the claims 2-14, 16-28, 30-44 and 46-53 is considered new as well (Art. 33(2) PCT).

A detecting device used in a multiple integrated laser engagement system and a gun simulation system is not fairly suggested in the prior art, and is not rendered obvious from the prior art. Therefore, the subject matter of claims 1-56 appears to inventive step (Art. 33(3) PCT).

The present invention is deemed to have an industrial applicability because it can be used in the detecting device used in a multiple integrated laser engagement system industry (Art. 33(4) PCT).
